PREFACE.

THE preceding title-page indicates the nature of the present work and the design of its author. Except so far as is necessary for etymological purposes, words occurring in writers ordinarily read by less advanced students of the Latin language are, for the most part, alone explained; and in their treatment the principles upon which the larger Dictionary of White and Riddle is based are uniformly followed, as fully as circumstances allow or require. The course which has been pursued may be thus described. Immediately after the assigned origin of each word, the literal interpretation is given between parentheses; and that English rendering of which such interpretation holds good in a pre-eminent degree is placed first in order, and regarded as the proper or primary meaning. When the source of a word is not discoverable, the fact is stated; and the ordinary interpretation is accepted and assigned the first place. When figurative and metonymical powers exist, either separately or conjointly, these are given, when they fall within the necessarily restricted scope of the work. A brief reference is usually made to some author; invariably so, indeed, when a quotation is deemed desirable or needful. Peculiar or unusual grammatical constructions are noticed. In the case of adjectives and adverbs, the comparative and superlative degrees are mentioned when they are known to exist; and whenever either one or the other or both are omitted, it is to be considered that no authority is to be found for their use. Proper names are included in the body of the work, and will be found in their alphabetical order; added to which their meaning is stated, whenever their origin is clearly traceable or may be reasonably conjectured; such meaning being printed in Roman type in the case of Latinized Greek names, and in Italic type in the case of pure Latin names. French derivatives from such Latin words as are comprised in this Dictionary are, moreover, mentioned.

In one respect, however, this book differs from the parent work, and, indeed, from any Dictionary which has yet appeared. This peculiarity consists in the mode of printing each leading word so as to exhibit its process of formation, and thus show the reason for the etymological meaning assigned to it. The plan was originally devised for, and carried out in, a work on the structure of the Latin language, entitled "Latin Suffixes," which was written for the special instruction of the boys of a particular department in a particular school. The success which attended its use has suggested the application of its principles in the present instance. Since, however, this mode of printing is a novelty in Lexicographical works, some explanation of the plan itself is required.

SIMPLE WORDS consist, in part, of a base, which may be either a root, or a theme—by some called a stem; in part, of either a suffix alone or a suffix preceded by a connecting vowel or by a consonant, which some etymologists term "euphonic," others "epenthetic." In order, as before stated, to show the formation of the word, and at the same time to assist in indicating the etymological force resulting from the combination of the base and suffix, a hyphen is placed between them. Thus, in am-or, ama-tor, and vir-tus, the respective bases are am, ama, and vir; the respective suffixes are or, tor, and tus. Again, in teg-ŭmen, mon-ĭtor, and mon-strum, the respective bases are teg and mon; ŭmen and ĭtor supply instances of the occurrence of a connecting vowel; while strum shows the employment of the euphonic or epenthetic consonant between the suffix and base; the connecting vowels being respectively u and i; the euphonic or epenthetic consonant, s; the suffixes, men, tor, and trum. In some few cases a seeming prefix is employed: see the articles a-pi-s, a-vi-s.

COMPOUND WORDS are formed sometimes by the union of two simple words, either without or with some letter-change or contraction; at other times by the combination of the primary elements entering into the formation of two (rarely more) simple words, either with or without a connecting vowel, and generally with, though occasionally without, a suffix; while, further still, a euphonic or epenthetic consonant is inserted in certain instances.

Of the former of these two classes of compound words, ab-solvo, per-rumpo, con-scendo, are examples. In order to distinguish the component parts, a hyphen is inserted between them. If the composition involves no letter-change, the word is simply printed as shown in ab-solvo, per-rumpo. But if a letter-change occurs, then mention is made of the fact, while the same mode of printing is retained. Thus, that con-scendo is a compound word, appears from the employment of the hyphen, while the change that is made in one of its members is mentioned immediately after the statement of its mode of flexion and of its conjugation, in the following way;—[for con-scando]; con-scendo being in fact the euphonised form of con-scando. Examples of the formation of compound words from two simple words, through contractions, are found in ne-mo from ne-homo, and in n-olo from ne-volo.

Of the other class of compound words, læt-ĭ-fĭc-o, and mont-ĭ-cŏl-a, exhibit the employment of a connecting vowel and the addition of a suffix. Puer-pĕr-us and con-sanguĭn-ĕus are formed without an intervening connecting vowel, while they each receive a suffix. In tæd-ĭ-fer and tub-ĭ-cen, there is a connecting vowel, but no suffix. While, as will be presently shown, equ-e-s and com-e-s receive a euphonic or epenthetic consonant, though it does not appear in their nominative cases. Here, too, as in the other class of compound words, hyphens are employed to separate the component parts. In that portion of each article which is devoted to etymological information, the respective roots or themes of the simple words are shown by their being separated by a hyphen from the part changed in flexion; the connecting vowel or euphonic (otherwise epenthetic) consonant is denoted by its being placed between parentheses ( ); while, further still, any letter-changes that may occur are stated.

By reference to the body of the work it will be seen that læt-ĭ-fĭc-o is for læt-ĭ-făc-o. Here læt is the theme of læt-us; fac is the root of fac-io; i, as will be seen from its mode of printing—viz. (i),—is a connecting vowel; while the o is a verbal suffix. So also in the case of mont-ĭ-cŏl-a, it will be seen that mont is the true theme of mons—the t disappearing, be it observed, in the nominative before the following consonant, s; that col is the root of col-o; that i is a connecting vowel; while the final a is a suffix. Here it should be stated, that where the true theme of a noun is not discoverable in the nominative case, the genitive is given, as there it always appears: e. g. mons, mont-is.

On the other hand, in puer-pĕr-us, puer the theme of puer, puer-i, is connected immediately with per, which is altered from par, the root of par-io; while the final syllable us is a suffix. In con-sanguĭn-ĕus, con,—the form assumed in certain cases by cum when used in composition, — is joined immediately to sanguin, which is the theme of sanguis, the n being thrown out before the following consonant s; while eus is a suffix.

Again. Tæd-ĭ-fer and tub-ĭ-cen respectively supply instances of words having a connecting vowel, but being without a suffix. Thus, tæd is the theme of tæd-a; fer is the root of fer-o; i is a connecting vowel. So, tub is the theme of tub-a; cen represents can, the root of can-o; while i is a connecting vowel.

It has also been mentioned that a euphonic or epenthetic consonant is occasionally inserted. The articles com-e-s and equ-e-s will show this. Com-e-s, it is stated in the work itself, is put for com-i-(t)-s, and equ-e-s for equ-i-(t)-s. In each instance the t does not appear in the nominative case; but it does appear in the oblique cases, and throughout the plural number; e. g. com-i-t-is, equ-i-t-is, etc. To indicate the nature of the letter t, it is printed, as shown above, between parentheses; viz. (t). It should be stated, however, that by some scholars this t is considered to be a suffix.

To pass now to some few other points which require mention.

Words, whether simple or compound, formed in the way above described, are often the sources of a still further formation. When this is the case, that portion of them which is not subject to flexion becomes the base of the new word, and is not divided into its original elements, but is printed continuously. To illustrate this by reference to words already used as examples. From mon-strum, con-scendo, are obtained, by the addition of suffixes, monstr-ōsus, conscen-sio (for conscend-sĭo): the bases being monstr, conscend, which are those portions of their respective words which are not subject to flexion; and the suffixes being osus, sio.

Words obtained directly from the Greek language, and which are in fact merely Latin representatives of Greek forms, are printed without any division: as, machina from μηχανή; Memnon from Μέμνων. Words, also, of doubtful origin are not divided.

When a consonant is inserted in the present tense of a verb in order to strengthen the present form, such consonant is inclosed, in the leading word, between parentheses: as, ju(n)g-o, ru(m)p-o; the true roots of which are respectively jug and rup.

When words are formed from verbs of the first conjugation, and receive the conjugational letter a, such a, when their origin is stated, is exhibited between parentheses; thus ama-tor, ara-trum, are said to spring from am(a)-o, ar(a)-o. But when the a is not employed, the ordinary form of the first person of the present tense of the verb is given; thus am-or, ar-vus are represented as having their sources in am-o, ar-o.

When a word has for its base the uninflected portion of a substantive of the second declension, or of an adjective following the form of the second declension, and such base ends in two, or more, consonants, a vowel is at times inserted before the last of them; as from minister, ministr-i, is formed ministĕr-ĭum, not ministrium; from tignum, tign-i, comes tigil-lum (for tigin-lum), not tign-lum; and from integer, integr-i, is obtained integel-lus (for integer-lus), not integr-lus. The same statement also holds good in some other cases; as from umbra, umbr-æ of the first declension, springs umbel-la (for umber-la), not umbr-la.

Some suffixes are simple, as or in am-or; others are compound as tus in vir-tus, which represents tut-s, the real or pure suffix being tut, and s the nominative case-ending. This, however, is a point which cannot be treated of at length in a preface.

When a suffix is preceded by a connecting vowel, or by a euphonic or epenthetic consonant, no hyphen is employed; as mon-itor, not mon-i-tor; mon-strum, not mon-s-trum.

As the suffix always forms the last portion of a word, and follows the hyphen in simple words and the last hyphen in compound words, it has not been thought necessary to repeat in any instance what it is, inasmuch as it is self-evident. Where no suffix is used, the fact will appear in the statement given of the origin of the word.

Such is the outline of the plan upon which the leading words in this work are printed; a plan which, it is confidently believed, will go far to render an acquaintance with the mode of formation, and the etymological meaning, of words in general, comparatively easy even to persons beginning to study the Latin language. Should further insight into these matters be desired, it may be obtained from the work already mentioned—"Latin Suffixes." Much, also, will soon be procurable from the forthcoming "Public Schools Latin Grammar," especially with regard to letter-changes, and the construction of the cases of nouns and of the perfect tenses and the supines of verbs. From an examination of that work, which has been courteously conceded to the author of this Dictionary, in common with certain others engaged in educational pursuits, he is enabled to speak of the effort to harmonize grammatical teaching in this country as being, in his judgment, most skilfully carried out, and likely to be hailed as a great boon by all who can appreciate the advantages that cannot but accrue from the general adoption of one standard Grammar for the primary instruction of youth.

The assistance which the author received in his former and larger Abridgment of "White and Riddle's Dictionary" from the Rev. Ernest Brette—Graduate of the University of France, Head Master of the French School at Christ's Hospital, and French Examiner in the University of London and for the Civil Service of India—has been extended to him in the present instance also; that gentleman having kindly undertaken to test the accuracy of the printing of the French derivatives. For this service the author tenders him his very sincere thanks.

Axŏna, æ, f. Axona; a river of Gaul (now the Aisne).

B, b, n. indecl. or f. The second letter of the Latin alphabet, expressing the soft labial sound between v and p, corresponding to the Gr. beta (Β, β), and briefly expressed by be. —At the beginning of words b is found only in connection with the consonants l and r (in pure Latin words); but in the middle of them it is also connected with other liquid and feeble consonants. — Before hard consonants b is found only in compounds with ab, ob, and sub, which prepositions alone end in a labial sound; and these frequently rejected the labial, even when they were separated by the addition of an s; as abspello, absporto pass into aspello, asporto; or the place of the labial is supplied by u, as in aufero, aufugio, for abfero, abfugio. The Gr. ψ was represented by bs; as, absis, Absyrtus, absinthium, and obsonium = ἀψίς, Ἄψυρτος, ἀψίνθιον, ὀψώνιον. — Also, b before s and t was changed into p, as scribo, scripsi, scriptum; nubo, nupsi, nuptum, etc. Still the grammarians not rarely vary in these words between bs and ps.—Of the liquids, l and r stand both before and after b, but m (with one exception) only before it, and n only after it; hence, con and in before b always become com and im; just as inversely b before n is sometimes changed to m, as Samnium for Sabinium; and scamnum for scabinum, whence the dimin. scabellum.—B is so readily joined with u, that not only acubus, arcubus, etc., were written for acibus, arcibus, etc., but also contubernium was formed from taberna, and bubile was used for bovile, as also in dubius (= δοιός, duo) a b was inserted. —B is rejected in uro for buro, from πῦρ, while it is retained in comburo and bustum.—B is reduplicated in bibo, from the Gr. πίω, as the shortness of the first syllable in the preterite bĭbi, compared with dĕdi and stĕti or stĭti, shows; although later bibo was treated as a primitive, and the supine bibitum formed from it.—Before b, m was sometimes inserted; e. g. in cumbo from κύπτω, lambo from λάπτω; inversely, it was rejected in sabucus for sambucus.—As in the middle, so at the beginning of words, b might take the place of any other labial, e. g. buxis for pyxis, balæna for φάλαινα, carbatina for carpatina, publicus from populicus, ambo for ἄμφω. The interchange between labials, palatals, and linguals, as glans for βάλανος, bilis for fel or χολή, is rare at the beginning of words, but more freq. in the middle, as tabeo from τήκω, uber from οὖθαρ, with which esp. the change of tribus Sucusana into Suburana deserves consideration.—Finally, the interchange of b with du at the beginning of words deserves special mention, as duonus for bonus; Bellona for Duellona; bellum for duellum, and bis from duis.

băbæ (pap-) = βαβαί or παπαί, interj. denoting astonishment or joy: Wonderful! strange! Plaut.

D, d, n. indecl. or f. The fourth letter of the Latin alphabet: I. Corresponding in sound and place to the Greek Δ, but called simply De: having a harder pronunciation when closing a syllable or when followed or preceded by other consonants: whence the frequent and, in part, very old orthography at (prep.), haut, set, aput, aliud, etc., atpellavit, atfines, itcirco, etc., Alexanter, Cassantra, etc., for ad, haud, sed, etc. II. As an initial, the letter d, in pure Latin words, suffers only one vowel after it: the single consonantal compound dr is found only in borrowed words, such as drama, Drusus, Druidæ, etc., and in the two onomatopees, drenso and drindio. Accordingly, the d of the initial dv, from du, was rejected, and the remaining v either retained unaltered, or was changed into b (so in bellum, bis, bonus, for duellum, duis, duonus).—As a medial, d, before most consonants, undergoes assimilation; assum, iccirco, quippiam, quicquam, for adsum, idcirco, quidpiam, quidquam; and in contractions like cette from cedite.—D before s was suppressed altogether in grammatical inflection.

as pes from ped-s; lapis from lapid-s; frons from fromd-s; rasi from rad-si; risi from rid-si; lusi from lud-si; clausi from claud-si (only the verb cedo assimilated d in cessi): and in composition, when another consonant followed after the s, as ascendo, aspicio, asto, astringo; also, in agnatus, ugnitus, and agnosco the d yielded to the nasal pronunciation of the gn; and in tentum to the concurrence of the n and t, because a combination ntt would be contrary to the laws of euphony, according to which no consonant can be doubled after another.—As a final, d stood only in ad, and in the instances cited below in no. IV. III. The letter d is interchanged: A. With t: mendax from mentior; quadraginta, quadra, etc., from quatuor.—B. With r: ar and ad; apor and apud; meridies and medidies; audio and auris.—C. With l: dacrima and lacrima, dingua and lingua; and, on the contrary, olere for odere.—D. With s: Claudius, from the Sabine Clausus, medius and μέσος; and, on the contrary, rosa and ῥόδον. IV. As a grammatical afformative, d was used: A. In the oldest period of the language, to designate the Ablat. Sing. and the adverbs proceeding from it. For the origin of this d it is difficult to account.—B. The d which arose from the demonstrative de (in quamde, analogous to the c from ce, q. v.) was appended: 1. To the Acc. sing. of personal pronouns ending in a vowel; so several times in Plautus med and ted. But in the classic age this d no longer appears.—2. To the neuter pronouns originally ending in a vowel, id (Gr. ἴ), quid, quod (Gr. τί ὅτι), istud, illud (from is-te, is-le), and alid, later aliud (Gr. ἄλλο).—3. In the older Latin attached to the particle SE =sine. And perhaps in like manner may be explained the forms prod and red for pro and re in the compounds prodire, prodesse, prodigo; redarguo, redeo, redintegro, redhibeo, etc.; reddo; and with epenthetic i in the anteclassic forms antidea, antideo, antidhac, for antea, anteeo, and antehac; but postidea for postea appears to have been formed simply after the analogy of antidea. V. As an abbreviation, D. usually stands for the prænomen Decimus; also Deus, Divus, Dominus, Decurio, etc. Before dates of letters, D signified dabam, and also dies; hence, a. d.. ante diem; in offerings to the gods, D. D., dono or donum dedit, D. D. D., dat, dicat, dedicat, etc. ☞ The designation of the number 500 by D does not properly belong to this place; because this is not the letter D (which would have denoted the number 10; cf. D. for the name Decimus), but the half of the original Tuscan numeral Ⓘ or CIↃ for 1000, which is like the letter D in shape.
